WOOD VENEER

Only the high-quality trunks and therefore the smallest part of the total felling can be used for the furniture construction. That applies to the use of the trunk for veneer production, too. The choice of wood is done selectively according to the requests typical for furniture.

In contrast to solid wood veneered surfaces are less sensitive to variabilities of temperature and dampness. Veneered surfaces are protected. This makes the care especially easy and exerts the beauty of the material.

The veneered table top and the cross bar are optionally available in:

- Beech oiled (UV laminated oil effect): With older trees a reddening of the wood inside the trunk arises as a natural corollary, named core. This core is characterized by a beautiful, bright colouring and unique growth marks.

- Wild oak natural and wild oak bianco oiled (UV laminated oil effect): Visual characteristics of wild oak are increased arising branches, small cracks, whirls or face sides. The agility of the wood is also formed by the natural play of colours.

- Wild walnut oiled (UV laminated oil effect): With wild walnut the wide colour spectrum is varying from grey-brown to red-brown painting to the point of nearly black inlets. Also a share of light sap wood is possible. Limb and growth marks as well as different intense wood structures are characterizing the nativeness of the walnut.

GLASS LACQUERED

Table tops consist of toughened safety glass coloured on an universal carrier plate. Do not put hot or frozen parts without trivet on the glass area.

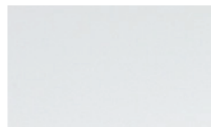

Also sharp-edged things must not be put on the glass area without protection or moved across the glass otherwise it will cause scratches. Depending on the light incidence and the viewing direction irritations as light clouds, coloured circles, cords or drawing defects could get visible due to the refraction of light in the glass. These optic effects are physical and unavoidable.

The glass table top is optionally available in:

- anthracite

- white

CERAMIC

The ceramic table top is optionally available in:

- anthracite

- cement optics
